News and Views shared at first Site Rep meeting of the Year

TVEA's first meeting of the year for site reps brought in a record number of new representatives. Exec Board is grateful for and excited about the many veteran reps who have returned and the new folks who have stepped up to leadership.

VP Jeff Kingsberg shared information about our TVEA team for Race for the Cure. More details are inside the newsletter! You can sign up online or your Site Rep has registration forms as well!

VP Edgar Diaz shared information about a new MOU signed last week to define the way smaller class sizes are implemented this year in our district—part of an 8-year process with the goal of getting to 24:1 ratios. That MOU is posted on our website and will be distributed to site reps shortly. It is not an all-encompassing MOU as some have been in the past. It only addresses class size TK-3. Further negotiations meetings are being planned right now with the district.

Other news and info shared:

- Adult Ed is back--to the level of funding the government is providing. Susan Ingle, our lone Adult Ed instructor, is working at 60%.
- Many teachers are struggling with inadequate resource budgets and fear running out of copies through the year.
- Teachers agree that Common Core lesson-planning is taking a lot of time.
- High School reps are concerned with large classes, stresses coming from high enrollment at GOHS and access to 6/5th assignments.
- TVEA asks you to participate in a professional development survey we'll be sending out this month. The data provided will help us plan free professional development for members and our first local Good Teaching Conference.
- TVEA shared information about the very complex LCFF that makes bargaining and financial monitoring complicated. School districts and the state do not have the software available to track how funding is being received and spent. Our bargaining team will work with CTA to identify any funding that TVEA can negotiate about.

TVEA's Exec Board and Leadership Council look forward to working to support teachers through the year ahead!

LCFF and Slightly Higher Enrollment Means Many Laid-off Teachers are Back at Work

TVUSD’s “rehire list” has been greatly reduced this fall because of provisions from the Local Control Funding Formula. In July, we were looking at 72 people on the list--some of whom had been laid off more than 3 years ago. Today the list includes 39 people--29 elementary and 10 secondary teachers. Of that 39, 8 have verified that they are currently working in other districts and 6 are working temporary jobs in our district. Ten more have declined positions, but were offered jobs in TVUSD. So the number of unemployed teachers seems to be closer to the mid- or low- twenties.

Why did LCFF mean more hiring? It stipulates that class sizes TK-Grade 3 show averages of student to teacher ratios decreasing towards a 24:1 ratio in 8 years (about 12% this year). So more teachers were needed to make slightly smaller class sizes.

About 15 new members have joined TVEA this year—mostly speech and language pathologists and special ed teachers. These newly hired individuals hold certificates that no one laid-off from a position in the district currently holds.

Amidst this good news is some bad news, too: 19 teachers on the “rehire list” will lose their rights to TVUSD employment on Sept. 30 because their 39 months (guaranteed to permanent teachers by California Ed Code) are up. Although these teachers can apply (and are encouraged to apply) for positions that are posted to the public, they do not automatically get called back into service when there is an opening.

TVEA Joins Race for the Cure!

How Kids Get Smart

Mary Jimenez (PES) recommended a great book that addresses the needs of our best and brightest students! Here's a condensed version of an article about it from The Economist, April 17th issue.

The Smartest Kids in the World: And How They Got That Way, By Amanda Ripley (Simon and Schuster)

Ms. Ripley follows three American teenagers who spend a year as foreign-exchange students in Finland, Poland and South Korea, countries that have scored highly on the PISA (Program for International Student Assessment) test that focuses on problem-solving. Their wide-eyed observations make for compelling reading. In each country, the Americans are startled by how hard their new peers work and how seriously they take their studies. Math classes tend to be more sophisticated, with lessons that show the often fascinating ways that geometry, trigonometry and calculus work together in the real world. Students forego calculators, having learned how to manipulate numbers in their heads. Classrooms tend to be understated, free of the high-tech gadgetry of their schools back home. And teachers in every subject exhibit the authority of professionals held in high regard.

This is a lesson Ms. Ripley sees throughout her tour of "the smart-kid countries." Children succeed in classrooms where they are expected to succeed. Schools work best when they operate with clarity of mission: as places to help students master complex academic material (not as sites dedicated to excellence in sport, she hastens to add). When teachers demand rigorous work, students often rise to the occasion, whereas tracking students at different cognitive levels tends to "diminish learning and boost inequality." Low expectations are often duly rewarded.

America's classrooms do not fare well in this book. Against these examples of academic achievement, the country's expensive mistakes look all the more foolish. For example, unlike the schools in Finland, which channel more resources to the neediest kids, America funds its schools through property taxes, ensuring the most disadvantaged students are warehoused together in the worst schools.

Ms. Ripley packs a startling amount of insight in this slim book. She notes that Finland, Poland and South Korea all experienced moments of crisis—economic and existential—before they buckled down and changed their stories. America, she observes, may soon reach a similar moment. She cites the World Economic Forum's most recent ranking of global competitiveness, which placed America seventh, marking its third consecutive year of decline. Meanwhile Finland, that small, remote Nordic country with few resources, has been steadily moving up this ladder, and now sits comfortably in third place.

TVEA and TVUSD Work Together on Healthy Kids Program Again

The teacher association and district have signed on to continue the Teachers for Healthy Kids Program, organized by CTA. The program enables parents in our district to apply for no-cost or low-cost health insurance for students at all grade levels. This year, Teachers for Healthy Kids is being offered on-line. When parents indicate they would like to be contacted, they receive a phone call interview to see if the family qualifies. Teachers know that healthy kids learn better, and kids with access to free or affordable health care are more likely to get exams and any necessary treatments. If you hear about a student who needs health insurance, encourage the parents to visit the district website to find out about Teachers for Healthy Kids.

TVEA's First Social Hour September 19th at Rodrigo's Restaurant!

Correction and Clarification

In a newsletter article last year, we stated that part-time job-shares could get credit for service for a full-year, instead of whatever their portion of a full-time position was, by working at least 75% of the days that year. Salary-wise, this information only applies to job-share teachers who are probationary, and have not yet received permanent status.

Job-shares or those considering job-sharing should note:

- STRS “years of service” are based on your % of full-time service. (Remember you’re contributing 50% of what full-time teachers contribute if you’re working 50%)
- California Ed Code addresses years of service, but does not address negotiated salary schedules.
- Our contract salary schedule does not indicate movement based on working 75% of the year in a part-time position, although some associations do have agreements that indicate that movement.
- Your seniority date never changes. Seniority-wise, two people could start on the same day, one in a part-time position, and one in a full-time position, and their seniority date would always be the same.

Teacher Feature - Hinkson Inspires Young Musicians for 34 Years

Brad Hinkson, band teacher at TMS, has been teaching music for 34 years. “Music and theater have always been part of my life. I’ve loved musical theater since junior high,” he says. “Becoming a band teacher was what I wanted to do,” he smiles. “I had no clue what it was all about.”

What don’t people know about your job?

They don’t know about the time involved, and the organizational skills that are needed. We have overnight trips to musical festivals, and there are huge responsibilities taking kids places. I have to fundraise (through a booster club), organize concerts, and choose new music each year for the bands.

What are your classes like?

I teach 4 different bands, really. I have a symphonic concert band, 2 beginning bands, and a woodwind band. There can be up to 60 in a class.

What’s the most fulfilling part of your job?

I like to see how kids progress. By the end of the year, they play so well. And often, I get kids for 3 years, longer than regular teachers get to have students, so I know them well. Some students I’ve taught have gone on to Hollywood jobs, or have gotten college scholarships because of their skills. I’ve had the chance to even teach kids of former students! Amy Thomas (TVHS band teacher) is also a former student. I’ve also helped to put together a local band and orchestra festival that went on for 20 years.

Why do schools need to offer band?

It is something that gives a great sense of belonging, camaraderie, and a bit of a safe haven. A great deal of students remain in band and will have the same set of friends for 7 years of school. This builds lifelong friendships. Hence me, still having friends for more than 40 years! It’s also been proven in many studies that music is good for the brain. Parents are sometimes focused on making a student’s transcript look good by participation in band, but really, middle school band can lead students to be lifelong musicians—carrying on in high school and beyond.

Have you changed as a teacher because of what you’ve learned about students while teaching band?

I’m not the same teacher as when I started. I learn more from them every year. I like this middle school age.

What community projects have you been involved in?

I’ve conducted the pit orchestra for the Temecula Valley Players. We’ve done Anything Goes, The King and I, Annie Get Your Gun, Jesus Christ Superstar, and The Music Man. And other things come up. I conducted the Valley Winds Community Concert Band for 9 years. I’ve also run the All-Valley Honor Band for kids in grades 8 – 12, with guest conductors-- pulling the best student musicians from all over the valley. And I’ve been part of a woodwind quintet before, too, playing clarinet.

How do you have time in your busy schedule for all these commitments?

Well, I had to give up the Valley Winds 8 years ago because there was too much going on. The community shows are intense, but just for about a month at a time.

How do you relax?

I play racquetball regularly, and I like to cook. I enjoy camping.

Do you have a favorite instrument?

I can perform on clarinet, saxophone, and flute. But I can play all instruments.

What are some of the changes you’ve seen over time in your job?

Lack of funding has affected bands everywhere. But the kids haven’t really changed. I give very few referrals. Music students are a different breed. They want to be here. The better a group gets, the more kids want to be in it.

Can you think of some projects over the years that have stood out for you?

Commissioning. I commission composers to write a piece for us, and then come out and meet the kids. It helps students understand that composing still goes on today. The composer usually is with us for 3 days-- and then the process culminates in a Friday concert, where the composer conducts his piece.

I value festivals with adjudicators and "clinics" with colleagues who come to hear the band. We get different insights to help us be better musicians.

Tell me about the Hinkson Music Foundation.

I have a former student from when I taught at VRMS who learned a fondness for music. He became a "jazzier," but not a professional musician. He was getting married, and he and his bride asked for gifts to "causes." He decided his cause was to raise money to use to inspire young musicians through a foundation. So far, we've given 2 awards. The first year it was a trumpet to a middle school musician, and the second year we sent the student to a summer jazz camp at Stanford.

To find out more about the Hinkson Music Foundation, go to www.hinksonmusicfoundation.org. You can make donations on-line to help a local aspiring middle school musician.

PTA is Our Partner in Advocating for Students and Public Education

TVEA maintains close contact with Temecula Valley Council PTA, which provides leadership to all the school-based PTA or PTSA groups in our district. (President Chris Lindberg is also the president of the Sparkman Alternative Ed Center PTSA, which encompasses all the alternative schools in our district, and she serves as the Teacher Rep member of the Executive Board of the Council. Many sites also have at least one teacher rep who serves on the unit's Executive Board.) The TVC PTA represents nearly 10,000 PTA members, and is currently comprised of twenty-six PTA/PTSA school-site units, so it represents a large and important part of our community.

Many TVEA members are also PTA members, and this "overlap" is important in building relationships on education issues that matter. You may have noticed TVEA's involvement in PTA-sponsored rallies and letter-writing campaigns in the past, and their participation in our campaigns, as well. TVEA's president and TVC's president have jointly visited legislators to discuss school funding and other public education issues.

Although educators and parents may not agree on every bit of legislation that goes through our state legislature, we do share a commitment to ensuring an excellent education for all district students. We band together to work towards adequate funding for our schools and fight the loss of beneficial programs in our schools.

TVC PTA will be offering parent modules this year to educate parents on the Common Core, helping parents learn how to best support their children at school. A recent Gallup poll reveals that about 2/3 of Americans have never heard of the Common Core, and many have misperceptions about how these state standards evolved and what they are intended to do for our schools.

TVEA encourages you to join your local PTA group and build relationships with parents to ensure they receive accurate information about public education and instruction.

TVEA Rep Reports from the 2013 National Educators Representative Assembly

By Marcia Varner, Representative to the NEA RA

The largest democratic body in the country met this summer in Atlanta, Georgia from June 30 to July 6. I had the privilege of attending again this summer as a rep from TVEA. There were over 8,000 educators from all over the country, including DOD (Department of Defense) educators from Germany, as well as Japan. We began each morning meeting with our State Caucus, beginning at 7:30am. At 9:00 a.m. we made our way over to the convention center to discuss New Business Items, Standing Rule Amendments, and amendments to Resolutions. Our day ended around 6:00 pm. every evening. There were many controversial topics discussed, such as, the $3.00 dues increase, which did pass--and changing the classroom teacher percentage requirement for NEA committees, which was defeated. Delegates had an opportunity to hear from both ESP (Educational Support Professional) and the NEA Teacher of the Year. They both gave a charge to educators to continue to stand up for our students. Next year the NEA-RA will be held in Denver, Colorado, at which time elections will be held to elect a new president, vice-president and secretary treasure. There will also be an election for an executive committee member. One of our very own California NEA Directors, George Sheridan, is running for this position. Being a delegate is an experience I will never forget. Consider running as a State delegate for 2014!
